THE BETTER CHOICE.

On New Year's day old Silas Walling entered his shop where he had six men at work making hats. He beat up his felt in the old-fashioned way; and his great kettle, where the hats were formed and blocked, was the self-same kettle which his grandfather had used before him, Silas was a Quaker-a meek, plodding, conscientious man, honest and honorable, just to the last degree and as generous as his means would allow.

On this New Year's day Silas entered his shop, and called his six men to come into his little counting-room, where, as had been his wont for many years, he had a present for each one. But this year he had made a change. Heretofore it had been his custom to purchase for each such article of use, or ornament, as he thought would be most acceptable. This time, as his men came before him,

"My good friends, you observe this book. It is a history of the Bible, one It was written by a scholar, without sectarian bias, whose only end and sim is and hitting them bang on the head to make clear and plain the hundreds of Hair banging by electricity is not desiabstruse points and doubtful passages, which the average reader could not understand without help. I had bought this book, and paid $5 for it, when it becurred to me that some of you-perhaps all-might prefer to receive the money, and then go out and purchase, each for himself, whatever his fancy might dic-tate. So I have brought the book in with me, and he may take it who wishes or he may take the $5. There lie six

THE DREAD OF LIGHTNI

Weak Nevers and Electricity.

(From the Hartford Times.)
The dread of thunder-storms, which is participated in by more than a fractional proportion of our population, is to them really a drawback to the complefe enjoyment of the beauties of nature which unfold to the touch of spring and summer.

There is not much use to reason with
